Hey, Anthony, good job peddling your book to every sub possible with different reasons why you recommend your book to each category of subs, but i dont know if it will increase sales like im assuming you're hoping. Best of luck anyway.

Very interesting research you're putting out keep up the good work. Seeing this post just made me think "well Mars just moved into Cancer, and it's the most hard (ie crab symbolism) and active/direct (cardinal) of the water signs, huh." Mars in Cancer gives me the impression of an armored warrior on the offensive; the Chariot card in the Tarot is also associated with Cancer, so furthermore there is symbolism of an object associated with movement in warfare.

This type of shit is so stupid. I have yet to see one of these types of posts be predictive in nature. Always saying shit after the fact

Because Astrology has never been about absolute predictions, that is it does not seek to prove causation; it just examines strong correlations between certain aspects and life events. By looking at things after they happened one is able to perceive trends, which to many could be dismissed as mere coincidences, but also can be considered a synchronicity ie a meaningful coincidence due to the noted trends and repetitions.

Most Astrologers aren't actually considered with predicting the future outright, rather they are just intrigued at how things could turn out due to similar circumstances from the past repeating themselves. There are a lot of bad astrologers though, that will try and make bold, concrete predictions, and these are the predictions most likely to fail.

The test now is, make note of the next time this astrological aspect occurs, and we will see if a similar news story or headline pops up. If it does, that's interesting and suggests there is a kind of repeating trend and energy involved. If not, then people have proven they have free will and don't live in a deterministic universe (astrology is still non deterministic though, as a birth chart only gives one a general outline of how their life will probably go, but individuals still have room to steer their own course and learn whatever lessons in life they feel are most important).

Ok so based on past events, when do you think the next big event will happen? What day?

Define big event? Predictive astrology isn't really my thing, I use it more for psychological and personal benefit. This year seems tame enough, but August-October look a little suspect, with a Uranus Retrograde starting then, and then Pluto shifting out of retrograde in October. My best guess for this year is things seem to ease up with lockdowns through the summer in some places, but kick back up again in the fall with another new wave of fear mongering in line with the flu.

There was an essay written by someone former US military I think the name of it escapes me, but his thesis was that empires on average last an average of 250 years. That happens to be about the length of a Pluto transit all the way around the zodiac, so some astrologers think a Pluto return foe the US spells a certain doom, which could take place in years or decades hard to say. The outer planets symbolism is trickier to work with because it references to large scale social changes over time, so it's pretty much impossible to figure out exact dates, unless one also looks at smaller transits. It would take me some time generating charts for different dates to find something interesting, but it's time consuming admittedly I'm not great at it some other people may have found something quicker, but it's sort of hard to find people into both conspiracies and astrology, like most people just end it at "oh the elites use numerology and symbolism and astrological stuff so it bad like the occult" and don't care to try and use what they're using against them.

It's not always about the planets though sometimes it is just straight numerology, and the 10th anniversary of 9/11 seems a little suspect for revamping anti terror rhetoric.
